Reading. Read the text and answer the questions.

Rascal was a naughty but funny puppy. When he became a year old, he took up a hobby. He started collecting our slippers. Every evening we left them on the floor next to the beds. Every morning we found them around Rascal, under Rascal and, of course, in Rascal's mouth.

We started closing the doors of our rooms at nights, but it didn't help. Now we could find the slippers in the morning, but every afternoon when we came home, Rascal had all of them on his rug. Then Mum said to us, 'When you leave the house, put your slippers in the drawer.' We did it, but it didn't help either. Rascal hunted our slippers. When our slippers came out of Rascal's mouth, they usually had big holes in them. So, poor Mum bought us new slippers, and soon Rascal had a really big collection. Then Dad went to a pet shop and bought some toys for dogs. But Rascal didn't want to play with his toys. He loved slippers! He slept with slippers, he ate slippers and he played with slippers.

One evening we sat down around the table in the kitchen, and Mum said, 'It's terrible! I buy four new pairs of slippers every month! And they aren't cheap!' 'Mummy,' said Pat. 'Let's buy Rascal his own slippers. I think he's angry because we all have got ones, and he hasn't.' 'Great!' cried Mum. 'Don't you think that he has already got too many?' 'What about buying another puppy? I think it's boring to stay alone in the house half a day,' said I. Pat jumped up and clapped her hands: 'Nicky, you're great! It's a brilliant idea!' That was how Rescuer appeared in our house. You know, I was right. As soon as Rascal saw Rescuer, he forgot about slippers forever.
